The new class of Enshrinees was just announced during “NFL Honors,” a two-hour primetime awards special that aired nationally tonight on CBS. The newest members of the Pro Football Hall of Fame are guard ALAN FANECA, coach TOM FLORES, wide receiver CALVIN JOHNSON, safety JOHN LYNCH, quarterback PEYTON MANNING, contributor BILL NUNN, wide receiver DREW PEARSON and cornerback/safety CHARLES WOODSON.

The Class of 2021 will be enshrined into the Pro Football Hall of Fame during “the greatest gathering of football” inside Tom Benson Hall of Fame Stadium in Canton on Sunday, Aug. 8, 2021

The Dallas Cowboys find themselves days from their first preseason game.

The game kicks off an extended weekend of Hall of Fame festivities, as there will be two Hall of Fame classes enshrined. The 2020 class did not get its ceremony last year, and then the 2021 Hall of Fame class will have its moment.

The Cowboys and Steelers kick off the 2021 preseason Thursday at 8 p.m. ET at Tom Benson Hall of Fame Stadium in Canton, Ohio.

The Dallas Cowboys vs. the Pittsburgh Steelers is just days away, and just the sound of that typically stirs Super Bowl memories. But not this time.

Everyone can debate the benefits of the Hall of Fame Game, and how much it actually resembles a regular-season game, but it's still an important step toward games that matter, and in a team's training camp schedule.

The 2021 Pro Football Hall of Fame class is led by Peyton Manning, who won a pair of Super Bowls and set many records in his 18-year career with the Indianapolis Colts and Denver Broncos.

Manning will be inducted into the Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, at 7 p.m. ET Sunday (ESPN) with seven others.

Fifteen men, some who have waited decades to hear their names called, were elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 2020 as part of its Centennial Class. The group was selected to honor the NFL's 100th anniversary. The members, who will be enshrined with the five modern-era players from 2020 at 6:30 p.m. ET Saturday (ESPN), include 10 seniors, two coaches and three contributors.

This game is only a tease for NFL fans as we'll have to wait another seven days for the rest of the NFL's 30 teams to play a preseason game. One thing to note is that NFL teams will play one fewer game this preseason. The Cowboys and Steelers will both play four preseason games this year. It'll be interesting to see how coaches break up playing time this preseason with first-team reps. Teams such as the Los Angeles Rams have limited starter playing time in the preseason to avoid costly injuries. With the NFL adding a 17th game this season, it'll be more important for teams to keep their starters healthy for a long campaign

The Steelers enter the mostly neutral site game as 1.5-point favorites against the Dallas Cowboys. Both teams underperformed to their standards last season. The Cowboys struggled to a 6-10 record with Dak Prescott missing time due to a dislocated and broken ankle last season.

Will this be Ben Roethlisberger's final season as the Steelers quarterback? He threw for only 3,803 yards last year and 33 touchdowns after throwing for 5,129 yards in 2018 and missing most of the 2019 season with injury.

Storylines for Cowboys-Steelers

How long do we anticipate starters playing in Thursday's Hall of Fame game given that the NFL has reduced the number of preseason games this year

I don't anticipate many if any, Steelers regulars playing against the Cowboys, other than maybe Cam Sutton, Alex Highsmith and rookies Pat Freiermuth, Kendrick Green and potentially Najee Harris. Even if they do play, they aren't going to be in there long. Mike Tomlin has said numerous times over the past two weeks that an extra week of practice and an extra preseason game allows him to afford younger players more reps early. — Mark Kaboly, Steelers beat writer

I'd be surprised if it was for more than one series for the Cowboys, if at all. With Dak Prescott, Amari Cooper and several standout offensive players not expected to play, it doesn't make much sense to play healthy offensive standouts like CeeDee Lamb, Ezekiel Elliott and Michael Gallup. The most intriguing player to watch will be rookie linebacker Micah Parsons. He needs NFL game reps, especially considering the variety of ways he's been being used in training camp. Other rookies or second-year players to keep an eye on CB Kelvin Joseph, WR Simi Fehoko, TE Sean McKeon, DT Osa Odighizuwa, CB Nahshon Wright. — Jon Machota, Cowboys beat writer

How much do we expect to see Dwayne Haskins play and has he developed a connection with any receivers early in training camp?

Haskins is going to play a lot. Mason Rudolph will get the start and could play deep into the first half, but Haskins will come in after that and likely play two quarters. Haskins wasn't very good during summer practices but has been better than Rudolph during the first two weeks of camp. Now, he's been mostly going against third-string defenders, but his decisions have been better and his accuracy has been a lot better than it was during OTAs and minicamp. He hasn't had much work at all with Chase Claypool and JuJu Smith-Schuster and that will be the case against the Cowboys as well. — Mark Kaboly, Steelers beat writer

Dak Prescott isn't expected to play with his shoulder injury. How will the Cowboys split the playing time between their quarterbacks?

Garrett Gilbert has been taking the first-team reps in place of Prescott. He should get the start. Cooper Rush will likely see some snaps, too. But Ben DiNucci, a seventh-round pick last year, is expected to see the majority of the playing time. He didn't get any preseason experience last year because of COVID-19 and the Cowboys need to see what they have in him. — Jon Machota, Cowboys beat writer

The annual selection meeting capped a year-round selection process. The newly elected Hall of Famers were chosen from a list of 18 Finalists who had been determined earlier by the Pro Football Hall of Fame's Selection Committee. Representatives of the accounting firm EY tabulated all votes during the virtual meeting.
